Ben Evans is a outdoorsy, humorous, energetic, non-violent revolutionary who is obsessed with politics and conversations about the current issues our world is facing. In May, he graduated from Guilford College with a degree in Community and Justice Studies, which is a field of study where he examined the many situations of injustice in this country and searched for ways to abolish them. Over the last four years he has spent much of this time volunteering with marginalized populations and organizing against several social issues in his community as well as around the country and the world. Ben understands that there is no lack of ideas in DC about what our country needs, but he longs for the opportunity to use his voice to further the cause for a just society that works for all people, and believes that this year will teach him an incredible amount to make this possible.
