My name is Jeremy Demarest. I am a 22-year-old mountain man who loves to lend a helping hand. I have just recently graduated from Columbia College in Chicago, where I studied comedy writing and performance, as well as business of live and performing arts.

I am an adventurer and I absolutely love this earth that God has given us. I have spent much of my time camping and exploring the world in which we live, having hiked over 2,000 miles in my life. The world is a beautiful place and we as its shepherds have to do what we can to protect it; the environment and all the living creatures who call it home, including our fellow man. Some of my favorite things in life are the simplest: genuine friends, a good ol' belly laugh and some finger lick'n good food.

I'm not sure where life is taking me, but I know I want to help bring peace and joy to the lives of those I meet along the way. I look forward to the journey I am going to take in this coming year as a Young Adult Volunteer in Atlanta. I'll be helping the homeless, growing in my connection with God and learning more about God's calling for me.
